“Parent Engagement Tracker is an effective tool for schools. It was instrumental in generating positive outcomes which resulted in measureable parent engagement activities at Windham Public Schools in Connecticut.

I believe it is a great online management tool to measure engagement and to produce needed reports to school and district administrators, and ultimately Federal Title 1 administrators.

In the 2012-2013 school year, Windham regularly entered adult involvement in the schools by using the Parent Engagement Tracker and found that 38% of parents participated in school sponsored activities. These activities included events, conferences, trainings and volunteerism, before, during and after school hours. It was found that the average engaged parent participated in 5 activity hours.

The Parent Engagement Tracker system helps keep schools focused on engagement goals and regularly reaching out to parents. An important aspect of the system is that district and school administrators could easily access the data to measure parent engagement.

Research has shown that parental engagement is known to increase attendance, improve behaviors and raise academic performance.
